Project Partnering Owner Relationship Team Leadership

Gray and Larson (2000) described the relationship between organizational culture and successful projects by means of a riverboat metaphor where culture is the river and the project is the boat. If the culture of the organization is conducive for completing projects successfully it is like paddling down stream.

A project is a temporary endeavour undertaken to create a unique product, service or result, often used to embed enduring business change (Larson & Gray, 2011). A well-planned project adopts processes that capture agreed benefits from the outset, putting in place mechanisms that monitor progress and delivery (APM, 2006).

Cowan, C., Gray, C. F., & Larson, E. W. (1992). Project partnering. Project Management Journal, 23 (4), 5-11. Reprints and Permissions. Project partnering is a viable option to the traditional adversarial approach to the contractor/owner relationship in project management. Originally a spin-off of the Total Quality movement, partnering has been gaining popularity not only in construction projects, but in all types of projects. Project partnering helps to build a united team with a common
